GRADY-WHITE FREEDOM 335

Grady-White now offers nine different dual-console models whose heritage dates back to 1979. The 335 is second largest to the 375, which is a true power-house in this genre. But the 335 is no slouch. A settee that converts (electrically) to a full berth fills the port console, while a complete head with shower, sink and toilet fills the starboard space; both sport cherry-and-holly soles.

Grady had room in this 33-foot-6-inch vessel to provide expansive companion seating, including a bow dining area. Directly behind the helm area, a sliding cockpit seat lets mates relax in comfort as they watch the lines. To starboard, a wet bar with a refrigerator and sink (and optional grill) lets you play or wash up after a catch and grab a drink.

Fold away the aft seat and retract the cockpit seat, and anglers have a full open deck. The 335 also comes with rod racks, tackle storage and a 42-gallon fish box in the transom that can be equipped with a freezer/cooler. An additional 58-gallon fish box lies in the starboard-bow area.

Live-bait anglers would surely opt for the 32-gallon lighted livewell.

“Dual-consoles make great fishing boats for the same reason they make great do-anything boats: They are supremely versatile,” says Shelley Tubaugh, vice president of marketing. “Fishing takes many forms; some of us might be casting one day, trolling in the bright sun the next, maybe live-bait fishing, bottomfishing in a drizzle, even kite-fishing in a sea breeze — each a very different activity with different demands on boat features and equipment.”
